LANARKSHIRE,

OR, as it is sometimes designated, CLYDESDALE, is a large, populous, and highly important manufacturing district, in the western part of the Lowlands, or south division of Scotland; bounded by Dumfries-shire on the south, the counties of Ayr and Renfrew on the west, those of Dumbarton and Stirling on the north, Linlithgowshire and Edinburghshire on the south-east, and Peebles on the east. Its extreme length (from south-south-east to north north-west) is somewhat more than fifty miles, and its greatest breadth in the middle (from east to west) is about thirty-four miles; it includes within its area about nine hundred and forty-two square miles of land, and three square miles of lakes: about one-half of the entire is calculated to be under cultivation. At an early period this extensive district was, for convenience, divided into two wards, called the Over Ward and the Nether Ward—Lanark being the chief town and seat of justice of the former, and Rutherglen of the latter: this arrangement was altered during the last century, when the county was divided into three wards, namely, the Upper, the Nether or Lower and Middle Wards—the chief towns being Glasgow, Lanark, and Hamilton, and each district subject to the jurisdiction of a sheriff-substitute. The central part of the county throughout is termed Clydesdale, or the vale of Clyde, from being the basin of that beautiful and useful river, of which we shall say more hereafter. Throughout the arduous struggle for Scottish independence, Lanark was the theatre of many miseries and military excesses. Under the reign of James I, a portion of the county was taken from it, and formed into the district of Renfrew. At a subsequent date, the turbulence of the Douglases, with the intrigues of the first Lord Hamilton, involved Lanarkshire in the various calamities consequent upon intestine warfare; it subsequently became subject to a thirty years' civil commotion, stimulated by the persecution of the more zealous presbyterians of this district by Charles I: the revolution of 1688, however, was the harbinger of a more tranquil future, and it has ever since advanced in wealth and every species of improvement.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, CLIMATE, &c.—The upper division of the county is very mountainous; from Tinto looking northwards, the face of the country is softened down to gentle elevations and gradual depressions. The Upper Ward, which may be deemed three-fifths of the county, is mostly hilly and moorish; and, from the nature of the soil and the altitude of the surface, cannot be considered susceptible of much agricultural improvement. At the commencement of the Middle Ward, the elevation of the land is obviously diminished, while the declivity continues descending towards the north-west; the surface is everywhere diversified by frequent inequalities, so as to leave no level space except the valleys along the river: indeed the Middle Ward, though esteemed a good agricultural district, is nearly one-third moss land. The Lower Ward is of a very limited extent, and derives its justly acquired importance, from being the seat of a most abundant population, The commencement of improvement in soil and cultivation, in this part of Scotland, was not apparent until about the middle or nearer the end of the eighteenth century: from this period, draining, planting, and enclosing took place in various districts; wheat, barley and oats (the two latter more abundantly), are produced from different soils in the county; potatoes are planted in considerable quantities; turnips are sown pretty generally, and artificial grasses are profusely raised in every direction: some flax is likewise grown, which is spun by females, who dispose of the yarn in the markets of Lanark, Biggar, Carnwath, and other places. Gardens and orchards occupy many acres of land, particularly on the banks of the Clyde; in this part they are of the most luxuriant growth, the orchards consisting chiefly of apple, pear, and plum trees. The inhabitants of the inland and upland districts breed and graze great numbers of black cattle, and sheep. In mineral productions, Lanarkshire is, perhaps, the richest in Scotland. Gold, to an important amount, was, at an early period, found in this county; and in later days, on the sides of a rivulet called the Wenlock, small pieces of that precious metal, in a pure state, have frequently been picked up from among the sand and soil brought down by the torrents from the precipices and slopes of the mountains; particles of gold have also been found in Crawford Muir, with some large pieces of lapis lazuli. At present, plentiful supplies of lead may be had in the parish of Crawford; and coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, sandstone, whinstone, fire-clay, and a variety of other metallic, mineral, and fossil substances are to be obtained abundantly in different districts of the county. The lead mines belonging to the Earl of Hopetoun, at Leadhills, afford employment and maintenance to a large number of workmen. Owing to the discovery of large quantities of bituminous shale, the manufacture of parraffin oil has been extending very rapidly in the neighbourhood of Airdrie, Coatbridge, and other places, and this manufacture bids fair soon to become one of the most important in the district. GLASGOW being the paramount seat of the manufactures for which Lanarkshire is so eminently distinguished, it is unnecessary in this article to treat of the subject at any length, as, under the head of that most important city, unsparing notice will be taken of whatever is connected with its commerce and products: it need only be mentioned in this place, that the cotton goods for which Glasgow is the vast depository, are, to a very considerable extent, woven in different villages and parishes in the county; and that this branch of manufacture alone, yields support to a very large proportion of the dense popupation.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the noble and pre-eminently useful Clyde, which is formed by the concentration of a number of straggling burns and rivulets, rising amidst the mountains, and issuing from the waters which separate Lanarkshire from the counties of Peebles and Dumfries. The chief of these tributaries are the Powtrail water, the Crook burn, and the Evan and Elvan waters; these, coalescing, compose a stream that, after flowing about two miles, receives an accession, first from Glengonar water, and next from Duneaton water, which constitute it properly the river Clyde, at a distance of upwards twelve miles from the highest springs of its fountains. The Clyde flows in a longitudinal direction, in a winding course of more than sixty miles, dividing the county into two nearly equal parts, and ultimately falls into the Frith of Clyde, opposite to the Isle of Bute. It ranks amongst the largest rivers of Scotland, and is navigable for vessels of one thousand tons burthen as far as the city of Glasgow. It waters and conduces to the fertility of delightful valleys, and in its progress, forms several falls and cascades of a picturesque and romantic character—particularly 'the Falls of Clyde,' which, with the beautiful scenery around, possess an almost irresistibly attractive influence in the minds and over the feelings of visitors for pleasure, and admirers of natural loveliness. On either side, the grand river receives a variety of tributaries, all of them respectively of important advantage in their application to the machinery of manufacturing and agricultural mills: the most prominent of these secondary rivers within the shire, are the Douglas water, the Mouse, the Nethan, the Aven, the Calder, the North Calder, and the Kelvin: there are other minor streams, of still less magnitude and consequence, as the Elwin, the Little Clyde, the Cotten, the Logan, and the Avon. The greatest elevations of this county, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are—the Lowther Hills, 2,450 feet; Tinto, 2,236; Culter Fell, 1,700; Welstoun Mount, 1,550; Leven Seat, 1,250; and Dickmount Hill, 700. The numerous lines of rail which permeate this county have given such facilities for the transmission of its products and its wants, as to cause considerable change in its character, and also in the relative position of a large portion of its population.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENATION, &c.—Lanarkshire comprises (including the city parishes of Glasgow) forty-nine parishes and two parts of parishes, which form four presbyteries in the synod of Glasgow and Ayr; it contains five royal and parliamentary burghs—Glasgow, Airdrie, Lanark, Rutherglen, and Hamilton. The county returns one representative to the imperial legislature; the city of Glasgow elects two members; and the royal burgh of Lanark, in conjunction with Hamilton and Airdrie in this county—Linlithgow, in the county of that name—and Falkirk in Stirlingshire, contributes another member.

AIRDRIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CALDERBANK, CLARKSTON, DRUMGELLOCH, GLENMAVIS, MOFFAT, RAWYARDS, STAND, THE PLAINS, WHITERIGG, NEW MONKLAND, CHAPELHALL, AND GARTNESS.

AIRDRIE is a thriving town, one of considerable manufactures, and a burgh of barony, in the parish of New Monkland; 18 miles N.N.E. from Lanark, 31 miles W. from Edinburgh, and 11 E. from Glasgow; eligibly situated on the great or middle road between the two cities, and occupying a rising ground with its principal slope to the west. The advance of Airdrie has been very rapid, and it is now one of the most flourishing inland towns in Scotland. Somewhat more than a century ago it consisted of but two or three farm-houses; it is now daily increasing in consequence and wealth, from the inexhaustible mines of ironstone and coal with which the neighbourhood abounds. A great impetus has within these few years been given to the trade of this neighbourhood by the discovery of a kind of coal called 'shale,' from which an oil, in its crude state, is extracted. Several firms are in course of formation, for the purpose of refining and distilling it. The country is intersected in every direction by railroads, for the transmission of coal, &c. to the various ironworks, and to Glasgow; with which city, also, and the intermediate places, communication is maintained several times daily. There is also a line from Coatbridge to Bathgate, passing through the town; it is the shortest route from Glasgow to Edinburgh: the Monkland canal also approaches within a mile and a half of the town. The Calder ironworks are situated about a mile and a half to the south-west, and the Monkland Steel Company's, two miles and a half to the south. Exclusive of the iron and coal works, which employ a great many hands, no inconsiderable number are occupied in weaving for the manufacturers of Glasgow, as well as in the Airdrie cotton works. Brewing is carried on extensively. Branches of the Bank of Scotland, the National, the Clydesdale, and the City of Glasgow Banks are settled here. There is a commodious hotel; and the shops for general supply are well stored with every necessary article for the demand of a busy population.

The burgh consists of two long parallel streets, the principal of which is Stirling street, through which the Edinburgh and Glasgow road passes, with several branching, and side streets, and bye-lanes; it is built on a regular plan, has many excellent houses, and is lighted with gas. It possesses a town hall, ornamented with a spire and clock; in the hall a justice of peace court sits, and a sheriff court, weekly. There is also a handsome pile called the County buildings, in which are the offices of the fiscal and other public functionaries. The increase of the town led to its being erected into a burgh of barony in 1821; and it is now governed by a regular bench of magistrates, composed of a provost, three bailies, and twelve councillors, with a treasurer and town-clerk: it unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Linlithgow, and Falkirk in returning one member to parliament. There are three churches of the Establishment in the parish—the parish church at New Monkland, one in Well Wynd, the other in Clarkston; the other religious edifices, will be found in a subsequent page. The town has several good schools, the principal of which is the Airdrie Academy, opened in 1849, and erected at the sole expense of the proprietor, Mr. Alexander, of Airdrie Hall, at an outlay of upwards of £2,500. There are several useful and benevolent institutions in Airdrie; amongst these is an orphan society, for clothing and educating twenty-four children, and a horticultural society. In the neighbourhood are many neat modern villas and handsome residences; Airdrie House, a short distance to the west of the town, stands amidst some fine pleasure grounds. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday; fairs are held on the second Tuesday in February, the last Tuesday in May, the fourth Tuesday in August, and the third Tuesday in November.

CLARKSTON is a village in the parish of New Monkland, two miles east from Airdrie, on the principal road between Edinburgh and Glasgow, containing a church of the Establishment.

CALDERBANK is a considerable village, also in the parish of New Monkland, about two miles south from Airdrie; this place derives its importance from the Monkland Iron and Steel Company, whose works are here.

CHAPELHALL is a village in the parish of Bothwell, but in the postal district of Airdrie; it lies about a mile east from Calderbank, and is, like that place, chiefly dependent on the Monkland Iron Company.

GLENMAVIS is a village in New Monkland parish, 1½ miles from Airdrie; the parish church and schools are situated here.

THE PLAINS is a small village, 1½ miles east from Clarkston, in the parish of New Monkland: there are two iron forges in this neighbourhood for the manufacture of shovels, &c.

RAWYARDS, WHITERIGG, MOFFAT, STAND, AND DRUMGELLOCH, are small villages in the parish of New Monkland, and postal district of Airdrie.

WITH CULTER, SYMINGTON, THANKERTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BIGGAR is a small town in the parish of its name, 28 miles from Edinburgh, 36 S.E. from Glasgow, 16 W. from Peebles, and 12½ S.E. from Lanark, situate on the road between the two last-named towns. The town, which consists principally of a spacious and tolerably neatly built main street, was created a baronial burgh by charter of James II., to Sir Robert Fleming of Biggar, in the fifteen century. It greatly owes its prosperity to a large and populous neighbourhood, the buildings are handsome, and the shops are well laid out, the whole being lighted with gas by a company formed in 1839. The Caledonian Railway Company, in 1858-9, constructed a single branch line of rails from their main line at Symington, passing through Biggar and terminating at Peebles, a distance of about twenty miles. This line is very advantageous, and adds greatly to the benefit of the inhabitants of Biggar and surrounding neighbourhoods. The chief employment of the inhabitants is weaving for the Glasgow houses. Nail making is carried on to a small extent; there are a few good inns, and three branch banking establishments. In 1545, Lord Fleming founded and endowed a collegiate church here for a provost, eight prebends, four singing boys and six poor men; it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and built in the form of a cross in a plain Gothic style: this ancient place of worship is now the parish church, and is the only object worthy of attracting the notice of the stranger. Tradition reports a bloody engagement to have taken place near this town, between the Scots, under Wallace, and the English army, when that distinguished leader drove the latter into a morass, where most of them perished. The parish is six miles in length by three and a half in breadth, having the river Clyde on its western boundary, Peeblesshire on the east, and the parish of Covington on the west. The weekly market is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the last Thursday of January and October, third Thursday of July (old style), and last Thursday in April.

BLANTYRE AND CAMBUSLANG.

BLANTYRE, or HIGH BLANTYRE, is a small ancient village, in the parish of its name; eight miles N. by E. from Glasgow, and between three and four from Hamilton; situate on the road between the last-named town and Kilbride, and in a rich fertile district in the middle ward of the shire—the parish having a front to the Clyde of about two miles and a half, and extending six miles in length. At BLANTYRE STATION, rather more than a mile from the village, are the very extensive cotton mills belonging to Messrs. Monteith and Co., which employ many hands, and is the only branch of manufacture in the district. In the parish is a spring strongly impregnated with sulphur; the water is of a similar quality to that of St. Bernard's well, near Edinburgh; it was formerly much resorted to, and is still efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and scorbutic cases. On the south bank of the Clyde, directly opposite to Bothwell Castle, on a rocky eminence, stand the ruins of the once splendid priory of Blantyre, founded early in the thirteenth century. At the reformation, the priory was demolished, and its revenues, with the patronage of the parish church, were given by James VI. to Walter Stewart, afterwards lord treasurer of Scotland, and created a baron in 1606 with the title of Lord Blantyre. The family is distinguished in both Scottish and British history.

CAMBUSLANG is a small parish, about three miles square, lying on the bank of the Clyde, with Blantyre on the east, Kilbride on the south, and Rutherglen on the west. The kirk, which is about four miles and a half from Glasgow and six from Hamilton, prior to the reformation, belonged to a prebend of Glasgow cathedral; there was also, at that time, a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary; in 1565, the chaplain, Sir John Miller, made grants of the property endowed for its support; these lands are still called 'Chapel lands.'

CARLUKE AND BRAIDWOOD,

WITH THE HAMLETS OF KILNCADZOW AND LAW.

CARLUKE is a small town and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, 32 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 20. S.E. from Glasgow, 10 S.E. from Hamilton, and 5 N.W. from Lanark. The parish, which lies on the south-east bank of the Clyde, is said to derive its name from St. Luke; to whom its old Parish church was dedicated--the adjacent Car signifying a strength or castle; the former was ruinous before the reformation, and of the latter no traces remain to mark its site. The town contains several regular streets. Kirkton street contains a number of handsome stone buildings, and is lighted with gas. Besides the Parish church there is a Free church, one each for United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, Congregationalists, and Roman Catholics; and also a number of schools. Few districts are richer in minerals of coals, ironstone and limestone, than that of Carluke. In 1836-7 extensive works were erected by the Shotts Iron Company; they are situate about a mile north of the town, and consist of three blast furnaces, with steam engines in connexion, of the aggregate power of 140 horses. The coal, ironstone and limestone are respectively of the best quality. The trade of the town and neighbourhood is chiefly confined to mining. Two branch bank establishments are settled here, the 'British Linen Company's Bank' and the 'City of Glasgow;' also a well-conducted Savings' bank, which has greatly encouraged industry and provident habits among the inhabitants at large. There are also two steam corn mills in the vicinity. The banks of the Clyde have long been famous for the culture of fruit trees. Apples and pears are produced in great abundance, and in higher perfection in this district than in any other in Scotland. The margin of the river is adorned with many beautiful mansions, and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds, and the beauty of the woodland scenery in this part is justly admired. That profound mathematician, Major-General William Roy, was a native of this parish. Fairs are held on the 21st May and 31st October. There is also a great cattle show held here yearly, on the last Wednesday in July.

BRAIDWOOD is a small village in the parish of Carluke, two miles from that town, situate about half a mile to the right of the road leading to Lanark. A little to the north-west of the village is Braidwood House, a handsome stone mansion, and about half a mile nearer the Clyde is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, apparently of the eleventh or twelfth century, consisting of a tower and keep in good preservation; but of the origin or uses of the structure tradition and history are alike silent. The building, which is overgrown with ivy, and partly inhabited, is called by the country people Ha'-bar (Hall-bar). Besides Braidwood there are the hamlets of KILNCADZOW and LAW in the parish; at the former place there is a Subscription school.

POST OFFICE, Kirkton street, CARLUKE, T. S. Aikman, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive at half-past seven morning, and from Glasgow and the North at thirty-six minutes past six evening, and are despatched to Glasgow and the North at ten minutes past six morning, and to Edinburgh and Glasgow at fifty minutes past eleven forenoon, and fifteen minutes past five afternoon, and to Carlisle and the South at five minutes past six evening.

CARNWATH AND CARSTAIRS.

WITH DOLPHINGTON, DUNSYRE, NEWBIGGING, WILSONTOWN, FORTH, BRAEHEAD, AUCHENGRAY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CARNWATH is a village (or small town) and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, 25 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 27 E.S.E. from Glasgow, 7 N. from Biggar, and the same distance E. from Lanark, situate on the main road between the latter town and Edinburgh. It consists of one street, nearly three-quarters of a mile in length; about the centre is the tolbooth, a plain old building, in front of which is the cross, an obelisk, whereon the distances from Edinburgh to various places in Clydesdale and Ayrshire are distinctly marked. The houses, which are neat slate-roofed dwellings, have considerably augmented in number of late years. Sir N. M'Donald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carnwath, is superior of the burgh. The estate is held of the crown, on payment of a pair of red hose, which are run for annually on the day succeeding the August fair, and followed by athletic games, to the successful competitors for superiority in which, are awarded medals and prizes in money. The church, a modern erection, stands at the western end of the town, contiguous to a fragment of the ancient edifice, which, prior to the reformation, belonged to the cathedral of Glasgow: the stone frame of the north window is still entire, and presents a fine specimen of masonry in the Gothic style; another portion of the old building is now used as a sepulchre by the Lockhart family; it contains the remains of the former lords of the manor, the Somervilles, and a tomb on which a Lord Somerville is represented lying in complete armour, along with the figure of his wife, in the exact costume of the fifteenth century. A new church is (1865) in course of erection on the site of the old one. It is a handsome freestone building of the Scotch Gothic style of architecture, and will accommodate 1060 persons. About a mile to the north-west of Carnwath are the shattered ruins of Cowthally Castle, in former ages the seat of the Somervilles. The Caledonian Railway Company have constructed a branch lines commencing from the main line at Cartstairs Junction, passing through Dunsyre and terminating at Dolphington, the whole distance being eleven miles and a quarter. The market, which is on Friday, is principally for meal. Fairs are held on the last Friday in February (new style), for hiring servants; the first Wednesday in April for show of stallions, seeds and plants; the first Thursday in July (old style), for horses and cattle; the second Wednesday in August (old style), for horses, cattle and sheep; and Friday before the 31st of October, for hiring servants.

CARSTAIRS is a small village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Lanark, four miles east of the latter town, and three west of Carnwath. This was evidently a place of some consequence in the time of the Romans, from the number and magnitude of architectural and other remains of that people which have frequently been turned up when digging below the surface. The cottages of this rural village have a remarkably neat appearance, being tastefully adorned with shrubs and flowers at the expense of the proprietor of the place. At some short distance from the village, embosomed in thriving plantations, is Carstairs House, the family mansion of Monteith, of Carstairs. The three fairs which were formerly held here, having gradually declined, are now altogether discontinued.

DUNSYRE (from dun-syrth, a steep hill), is a rural parish bounded by Dolphington and Walston on the south, and Carnwath on the west and north-west. The district lies high, and is chiefly devoted to pasture and agriculture. The village, with the parish church, stands in the south east part of the parish, on the high road. From the twelfth century to the reformation the parish was a rectory of the monks of Kelso.

COATBRIDGE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF OLD MONKLAND AND CADDER; ALSO THE VILLAGES OF BAILLIESTON, GARNKIRK, GARNQUEEN, CHRYSTON, DUNDYVAN, MOODIESBURN, GARTSHERRIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COATBRIDGE is a populous town in the parish of Old Monkland, situated on the Glasgow and Edinburgh road, eight miles east from Glasgow, and two miles west from Airdrie. Although but a few years ago this place was of trifling importance, yet by its local advantages, which consist in abundance of coal and ironstone, it has now become very populous, and its well-stored shops and busy streets give it the appearance of a thriving town. The Monkland and Caledonian Railways pass through the town, as does the Monkland canal, and they add very considerably to the wealth of the locality, by affording ready transit to its productions. In the vicinity are six establishments for the manufacture of iron, viz., the Gartsherrie, the Calder, the Dundyvan, the Carnbroe, the Langloan, and those of Summerlee, all of which are on an extensive scale and afford employment to large numbers of the inhabitants; there are seven establishments for the manufacture of malleable iron. This branch of the irontrade is still considerably on the increase in the neighbourhood. The manufacture of iron tubes is carried on very extensively by the Caledonian Patent Lap Welded Tube Company, Messrs. A. & J. Stewart of the Clyde Tube Works, Messrs. Begg and Wilson, and Messrs. Lumsden and Sons. These firms have premises replete with every convenience for this manufacture. There are also several extensive engineering and iron founding establishments; railway waggon building is carried on by several firms, and preserves and confectionery are extensively manufactured by Mr, Thomas Phillips. The Clydesdale, the National, the Royal, and the Union Banks have each a branch located here. There are places of worship for various denominations.

OLD MONKLAND is a parish divided into three districts for registration purposes, and extends from the right bank of the Clyde to the border of New Monkland, a distance of between seven and eight miles, by a breadth near the Clyde, of little more than one, but afterwards expanding to nearly four miles. It is bounded on the north by Cadder and the barony parish of Glasgow, and on the south by Bothwell. This is one of the most productive parishes in Lanarkshire; it is well enclosed, cultivated, and until commerce, that sore destroyer of sylvan beauty, made such rapid strides, was one of the most beautiful and finely planted in the county. At TOLCROSS, in this parish, are the Clyde Iron Works and extensive collieries, the property of Colin Dunlop, Esq. The whole of this parish is rich in minerals, and it is one of the most important in the kingdom in this respect.

BAILLIESTON is a large village, in the parish (parochial) of Old Monkland, from which it has been disjoined, for ecclesiastical purposes, and erected into a parish, quoad sacra, under the name of CROSSHILL; it is situated three miles and a half from Coatbridge, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, and contains places of worship for the Establishment, the United Presbyterian, and the Episcopal Church.

CALDER or CADDER parish extends along the northern boundary of Lanarkshire, having Kirkintilloch and New Monkland on the east, New Kilpatrick on the west, Campsie on the north, and the barony parish of Glasgow on the south. Great improvements have been made in this district in agriculture. This progressive benefit has been accelerated by the great canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which passes through the parish for five miles, whilst the river Kelvin washes its northern boundary to the extent of six miles. The Monkland and Caledonian Railways pass through this parish. The discovery of coal on the estate of Calder, and coal and very valuable fire clay on that of Garnkirk, has materially enhanced the price of land. CHRYSTON, MUIRHEAD and MOODIESBURN are small villages in this parish.

GARNKIRK, in the parish of Calder, is situate on the Caledonian Railway, about six miles from Glasgow, and three and a half from Coatbridge; this place is important from the Garnkirk Fire Clay Works being situated here. This is perhaps the largest and most complete manufactory of fire clay in Great Britain. There are about 500 men employed in mining and manufacturing the material, and in connection with it there are extensive lime workings, for the supply of the neighbouring iron works. The quality of the fire clay on this property is quite equal to that of Stourbridge, and the bricks, furnace blocks, retorts and crucibles find their way in large quantities to all parts of America, Germany, Holland and Russia. The manufacture of glazed pipes for water and sanitay purposes and of ornamental articles, such as chimney cans, vases, and fountains, is also extensively carried on at this establishment. There are likewise two other extensive establishments engaged in the manufacture of articles as above described, viz., Messrs. Hurll, Young and Company, at Cardowan and Heathfield, and Mr. James Binnie, at Gartcosh.

GARNQUEEN is a station on the Monkland Railway. Here, at the Glenboig Works, adjoining the station, fire clay and fire bricks are extensively manufactured, as is also Roman cement. Fire bricks are also manufactured at Gartferry, one mile distant, and in this vicinity coal is also plentifully obtained. At ROBROYSTON, Sir William Wallace was betrayed into the power of Edward I. by Sir John Monteith, who, according to tradition, was bribed for that purpose by the English court.

DOUGLAS AND RIGSIDE.

DOUGLAS, a village of great antiquity, is 41 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 31 S.S.E. from Glasgow, 15 N. from Leadhills, 12 S. from Lanark, and 8 S. from Lesmahago; situated nearly in the centre of the parish of its name, on the south side of the Douglas water, and on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. The parish of Douglas takes its name from the stream that flows through it—the British words Dhu Glas, signifying the 'dark blue stream;' and this is descriptive of the colour of the water. From such an etymology is derived the once dreaded and still noble name of Douglas (of this ancient family copious and interesting particulars will be found in Messrs. Chambers' 'Gazeteer'). In the vicinity of the village, on the bank of the river, stands Douglas Castle, the residence of Earl Home, surrounded by extensive plantations. The old castle of Douglas was burned down in 1760: the following year, the present edifice was begun to be erected in a magnificent style, from a plan by the late architect Adam; but only a part of the original splendid design has as yet been completed.

The village consists of several narrow, irregular streets, formed (without any regard to order) on uneven ground; near the centre, in the village burial-place, stands all that remains of the ancient Parish church; in a vault belonging to the original structure, are to be seen monuments of some of the great chiefs of the house of Douglas; several of these highly merit the investigation of the curious in sepulchral sculpture. Besides the Parish church, there is a Free church, an United Presbyterian, and a number of schools. The village is well lighted with gas. The inhabitants in general are employed in handloom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The parish throughout is well stored with limestone, freestone and coal; of the latter mineral, there are extensive seams, many of which are seven feet thick. The district is well watered; besides the Douglas, there are three minor streams, which merge in that river previous to its falling into the Clyde, about seven miles below the village.

Fairs are held on the third Friday in March, the first Friday after Whitsuntide, the third Friday in October, and the first Friday after Martinmas, for hiring servants; the second Wednesday in June, for shearers; and the second Friday in August, for horses, of which there is always a large show.

RIGSIDE is a small village in the parish of Douglas, four miles north therefrom, situated on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. In its neighbourhood are several collieries, which are worked by James Swann, Esq., of Collier Hall; it also abounds with rich and productive beds of ironstone, limestone and fire-clay.

GLASGOW

WITH GOVAN, PARTICK, MARYHILL, SPRINGBANK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE City of Glasgow, like many other important places, has no authentic record concerning the date of its origin, or the etymology of its name. There is however, sufficient reason for believing that the Scottish western metropolis was a place of considerable importance, during the time the Romans retained their acquisitions in Scotland; the name Glasgow is admitted to be Gaelic, but the interpretations of its meaning are both varied and discordant. Little doubt its existence as a Scottish town is traceable to the foundation of that religious society out of which the venerable cathedral tooks its rise. Its present magnitude, beauty, extensive manufactures, and commerce sufficiently indicate the early vitality and energy of its inhabitants. In point of commercial greatness, Glasgow may be reckoned the second city in the empire: it is in the county of Lanark, situated on the banks of the Clyde; 397 miles from London, 44 from Edinburgh, 137 from Aberdeen, 34 from Ayr, 29 from Stirling, 213 from Manchester, the same distance from Liverpool, 95 from Carlisle, 196 from Dublin, and 127 from Belfast. This distinguished city, in addition to its other claims on our regard, is entitled to respect for its venerable age; more than 1,300 years it has already numbered, and, unlike the myraids of sons and daughters to whom it has given birth, its beauty and vigour have augmented with its age. St. Kentigern, or Mungo, was the reputed parent, who founded a bishoric on the site of the future city, in the year 560; the tomb of this saint is still shown in the cathedral. John Achaius, who had been invested with the crozier about the year 1124, erected the present cathedral, which was consecrated in 1133. Some years after this, William the Lion elevated the rising town to the rank of a royal burgh, with the privilege of an eight days' fair and a weekly market. In 1268 the mace was borne before a provost and baillies, and a seal was allowed them distinct from that of the bishop and chapter. In 1345 Stockwell-street bridge was built, at the joint expense of Bishop Rae and Lady Lochow. Prior to this period the principal street was Drygate; some small tenements near the head of this street once formed part of the town mansion of the noble family of Montrose; Rotten-row was then also one of the chief streets. In 1450 the city and barony of Glasgow were raised by James II., at the supplication of Bishop Turnbull, into a regality; in consequence of this proceeding, the bishops therefore obtained the nomination of the civil athorities. Bishop Turnbull, next year, induced Pope Nicholas V. to issue a bull for the erection of a university; Rotten-row was the original site, but, eight years afterwards, Lord Hamilton bequeathed a tenement and four acres of land, on the north side of Blackfriars church, where the college now stands. In 1484 the Tron church was built; this edifice was destroyed by fire in 1793. The endowment of the university contributed essentially to the enlargement of the town—yet, several years subsequently, the inhabitants did not exceed 1,500 in number; the majority resided in the neighbourhood of the cathedral, and about the precints of the bishop's palace; but as the population increased, the habitations gradually extended towards the Cross. On the formation of the society of fishers, the Saltmarket soon gave convenient access to the Clyde; this humble community built Bridgegate (then called Fishergate), and appears to have been the first commercial company established in the city—fish, chiefly salmon, then being the staple of its trade. In 1527 the streets of Glasgow were stained with the blood of two martyrs to the principles of the Reformation, Jeremiah Russell and John Kennedy, the latter a youth of eighteen years of age; thier deaths rather accelerated than retarded the progress of the opinions hey had avowed; forty-five years after that event, the High Church was opened as a Presbyterian place of worship; but 1662 episcopacy being in restored and enforced by the bayonet, the persecutions of the Presbyterians became as fierce as when impelled by the intolerance of popery; and an inscription on a stone placed in a wall beyond the infirmary records the names of three of its victims—James Nisbet, James Lawson, and Alexander Wood, who, in 1684, 'were martyred for their adherence to the word of God and Scotland's covenanted reformation.' These sanguinary efforts to establish prelacy continued, with more or less violence, until the happy revolution gave permanence to the presbytery. In 1638 was made the first purchase of land for the formation of a public green; but it was not till 1773 that the entire plot (described elsewhere) became the property of the city. During the rebellion of 1715, the citizens of Glasgow displayed great zeal in the cause of the reigning family; they despatched six hundred men, at their own expense, to join the royal army; and a ditch round the town, twelve feet broad and six feet deep, was commenced, but the speedy overthrow of the Stuart faction dispensed with the necessity for its completion. In 1763, James Watt, who was educated in Glasgow, withdrew to a private room near the Broomielaw, and during his seclusion, with a single assistant, commenced those experiments that issued in such momentous results. Forty-nine years afterwards, the unpatronised Henry Bell, of Helensburgh, launched his little 'Comet' on the Clyde—the first steamboat which plied on any water, and proved its independence of wind and tide. The 12th March, 1782, was memorable for the extraordinary height of the tide; the Clyde rose upwards of twenty feet about its usual mark, and completely insulated the village of Gorbals.

In 1787 a strike occured amongst the weavers against a reduction of wages. The men cut the webs from their looms and burned them in the streets. So serious did the riot grow, that the military were called out and the people were fired upon, several persons being killed and wounded. It affords an instructive glimpse relative to the distribution of the population in those days to read that the now deserted Drygate was the scene of the disturbance. Those killed were buried in what was then the suburb of Calton, six thousand people attending their funeral. In the wars which were waged against the revolutionary leaders of France, and their successor, Napoleon I., from 1791 to 1815—Glasgow displayed her loyalty in a conspicuous manner. Her citizens mustered as volunteers in great force, with the view of repelling the anticipated invasion. Sir John Moore, who fell at Corrunna, was a native of the city. In 1819-20 the distress and discontent which pervaded the country were largely felt in the district. A body of half-famished weavers, to whom political objects were ascribed, having assembled in force at Bonnymuir, near Kilsyth, were dispersed by the yeomanry. The incident is memorable as having occasioned the last execution that has taken place in Scotland for a political offence. James Wilson, a weaver from Strathaven, was convicted (on insufficient evidence it is now believed) of having taken a leading part in the movement. He was first hanged and then beheaded. The passing of the Municipal Reform Act gave here, as elsewhere, a great impulse to the general interest in public matters, and the benefits derived from it were vastly enhanced twenty years ago, by obtaining parliamentary sanction to an act extending the municipal boundaries. Formerly, Glasgow proper stood surrounded by the adjacent burghs of Calton, Gorbals, Anderston, &c.—much as the city or London does—a mere speck in the centre of what was to all intents and purposes, except in the matters of government and administration, one city. Now the whole is embraced.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF GLASGOW AND ITS INSTITUTIONS.

The river Clyde divides the city into two unequal parts, that portion occupying the northern bank being the chief: this comprehends the old and new towns, with the suburbs of Calton, Bridgeton, Anderston, Brownfield, and Finnieston; the division on the opposite side of the river consists of the barony of Gorbals; including Hutchesontown, Laurieston, Tradeston, and Kingston. The communications between these two divisions of the city is by five bridges, three of which are of stone, while two are suspension bridges: that at the end of Jamaica-street, called Glasgow-bridge, is conspicuously elegant, it consists of seven arches, and the curvature is so very trifling that the transit by it is attended with no inconvenience. The noble quays extend from this bridge in a westerly direction, affording altogether 4,248 feet of quay wall; and it is here that the vessels by which this part of the river is crowded, discharge and take in their cargoes. A commodious shed ranges along the greater part of the line; and (owing to the admirable regulations established, and the commanding width of the line), notwithstanding the prodigious amount of business transacted, the operations of the port are accomplished without confusion or noise, and with surprising celerity. On the 9th of April, 1851, the foundation stone of the Victoria-bridge was laid by the Duke of Athole, and a gorgeous municipal and masonic procession gave eclat to this memorable event. The Suspension-bridge, between Glasgow-bridge and the Victoria, for foot passengers, gracefully diversifies the pontine communications between the north and south sections of the city; it is one of the finest bridges in Europe, with a span of 420 feet, the chains rest on handsome piers, with columns of the Grecian Ionic character in cast iron. The river, between the opposite quays, has not only been widened but it is progressively being deepened through the instrumentality of dredging machines, so that ships of upwards of 1,000 tons burthen now discharge at the Broomielaw. The mud raised by the machines is conveyed down the Clyde in flats, and spread where the shore is low and swampy, by which process the banks of the river are raised, and a rich soil is deposited. A diving bell is also employed, as an assistant in the subteraqueous operations.

The main line of street running east and west, is nearly two miles in length, and eighty feet wide, assuming at different points the names of Gallowgate, Trongate, and Argyle-street. Noble houses and handsome shops, with few exceptions, range on both sides throughout the entire line. The street which runs from north to south is about a mile in length and fifty feet broad, bearing successively the names of Castle-street, Kirk-street, High-street, and the far famed Saltmarket, anciently the abiding place of 'Bailie Nicol Jarvie, and mony mair bailies.' The point of intersection of these two lines is called the Cross, and was at one time, before the population had progressed westward, the nucleus of the city. Here stands the Town Hall and the Tontine Coffee-room (or old Exchange) with a fine piazza in front; opposite to which is an equestrian statue of King William III, presented to the city, 1736, by James M'Crea, Esq. then governor of Madras, and a native of Glasgow. Parallel with Argyle-street, towards the north, are three other splendid streets, named Ingram-street, St. Vincent-street, and George-street, crossed by others of uniform elegance. But Buchanan-street, which passes in a northern direction from Argyle-street, opposite St. Enoch-square to the station of the Caledonian railway, is the handsomest business street in the city. Parallel with this is Queen-street, in which stands the Royal Exchange, with the equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington in front, unsurpassed for grace of style and truthfulness of expression. Sauchiehall-street, which runs from Buchanan-street westward nearly a mile, ranks among the finest streets in the city. The shops on its southern side are very handsome and and attractively stored. The architectural taste displayed in the western section of the city is of the first order, and to it, the two fine squares, George and Blythswood, along with the handsome streets and crescents that have lately sprung up beyond them, add a graceful magnificence. Park Gardens, Quadrant, and Circus, the Claremont Gardens, and Woodside Terrace, all challenge admiration, by their spacious and handsome appearance. The houses are all of stone, and the construction and arrangement of the streets impart to this vicinity a resemblance to a portion of Bath. In George Square are magnificent equestrian statues of the Queen and the late Prince Consort which occupy corresponding positions inside the quadrangle. A tall pillar, surmounted by a statue of Sir Walter Scott, rises between them, while figures of Sir John Moore, Sir Robert Peel, and James Watt also adorn the square. The last affords an exquisitely graceful, and happy example of the sculptor's art. The old town lies to the east of the Trongate, extending to the Clyde on the south, and to the cathedral on the north. The Argyle Arcade runs from Argyle-street to Buchanan-street, and contains attractive shops, covered in by a lofty roof of glass. There is a second Arcade in Sauchiehall-street, called the Wellington; and the Bazaar is situated in Candlerigg-street.

At the back of the cathedral is a rocky eminence called the Merchants' Park, upon the summit of which, on a fluted Doric column, fifty-eight feet high, is placed a colossal statue of the illustrious Scottish reformer, John Knox; appropriate inscriptions are sculptured on the four sides of the pedestal; this proud monument, so attractive from its position and magnitude, was raised in the year 1825. Contiguous to this is another, similar in character but of inferior dimensions, erected more recently, to the memory of M'Gavin, the formidable opponent of popery, and author of 'The Protestant.' The statue of Knox is 250 feet above the level of the Clyde, and is a conspicuous object at a great distance; the artist was Mr. Forrest, of Lanark—the likeness was taken from an original painting in the Glasgow University. The surrounding grounds have been tastefully planted and formed into a cemetery, named the 'Necropolis,' and the stranger will be highly gratified by a visit to this interesting spot. The view from the summit of the hill is pleasing and commanding, access to it being obtained by a handsome bridge, beneath which is a waterfall.

A monument of Lord Nelson, on Glasgow Green, is a simple obelisk, 143 feet in height, surrounded by a protecting railing; the four sides of the pedestal record the birth, achievements, and death of this naval hero; and the fact of this being the first memorial sculptured to his memory, impresses a high idea of the public spirit of the citizens. The 'Green,' of which it is so conspicuous an ornament, is Glasgow's pride; neither encroachment nor injury can be committed upon it with impunity; its motto is the same as that of the national thistle,—'Nemo me impune lacessit.' This delightful promenade, from its extent, its verdure, and its plantations, may be denominated a park, the Clyde washes its southern margin, the prospect towards the south-east is beautiful and extensive—woods and villas in the foreground, and the hill of Dychmont, with the loftier and more distant one of Tinto, in the distance. Here, during the summer months, may be witnessed the national game of golf, and often is the Green animated by military evolutions. Besides the Green, two other large and beautifully laid-out parks have been acquired through the wise liberality of the Corporation One, in the west-end, comprises sixty-two acres, and is named the Kelvingrove Park; Sir Joseph Paxton furnished the design for its ornamentation. On its purchase and adornment a sum of £89,000 has been expended. The other, to the south of the city, is named the Queen's Park. It at present extends to 142 acres; but it is meant to dispose of a considerable part of it for building purposes. Its cost has been about £60,000.

Conspicuous amidst the throng of elegant buildings which adorn the city are the Banking Establishments, many of which are architecturally beautiful, and all are proud testimonials to the commercial enterprise of this port, of which they are representatives. Some of the warehouses and offices of recent erection are also large and imposing buildings; notably so are the immense wholesale warehouse of Messrs. J. and W. Campbell and Co., and a superb range of offices, known as Victoria Buildings, in West Regent-street; either of these piles, if advantageously situated, would have a commanding effect. The Royal Exchange is also a very handsome structure. It stands in Queen-street. The principal entrance is by a grand portico of twelve fluted Corinthian pillars, thirty feet high. After passing through a tasteful vestibule, the visitor enters the great reading-room, which is 120 feet long and 62 feet wide; the lofty roof is supported by a double row of columns nineteen feet high, each composed of a single stone. A dome, supported by twelve Corinthian pillars, surmounts the building. The great room is supplied with all the leading newspapers, and strangers are courteously allowed the privileges of the room upon subscribing their names. The numerous apartments below and above are appropriated to various commercial purposes. The municipal buildings in Wilson-street form a splendid group of Grecian architecture: in front is an Ionic portico, chastely proportioned; the facade is handsome, stately, and imposing. Internally, it contains a council hall (in which the municipal body hold their meetings), splendidly decorated; there are also the fiscal's chamber, the council record chamber, and other public offices, all elegantly fitted up and beautified. Another hall, styled the Merchants' Hall, in Candlerigg-street, displays much grandeur, and so far as ornamentation is concerned, is regarded as the most magnificent in the city. The Trades' Hall, in Glassford-street, is a very handsome building; the front consists of a centre and wings, supported by a rustic basement, four Doric columns above support the entablature, and a dome, surmounted by a lantern, rises from the roof. The hall, one of the finest rooms in the city, is seventy feet long, thirty-five broad, and twenty-four high, exclusive of the dome. On the walls and staircase are hung portraits of persons of the trades' rank that have conferred donations on the house, and also tablets recording the names of the convenors from 1605 to the present time. The City Hall, in Candlerigg-street, is a very spacious and handsome building, in which public meetings are commonly held. In Hope-street stands the Corn Exchange, a spacious and handsome structure, with a portico, sustained by Corinthian fluted columns, the interior is fitted up in complete adaptation to the peculiar transactions of this important market, held every Wednesday. There are several corn mills in and around Glasgow, upon a scale of great magnitude. No stranger can perambulate Glasgow without noticing its admirable pavement. The material being granite, of almost indestructible hardness, Glasgow may be deemed one of the best paved cities in Europe. The whole extent of the thoroughfares within the city, apart from mere lanes, alleys, &c. is about one hundred and twenty miles. A sum of £30,000 a year is expended upon keeping them in repair. Since the Paving Act of 1856 was passed, upwards of £150,000 has been laid out on pavement alone. The city is plentifully supplied with good and cheap gas by two extensive companies—the Gas Light Company, Virginia-street, established in 1817, and the City and Suburban Gas Company, Miller-street, formed in 1843. The water supply is also of remarkable excellence. It is derived from Loch Catrine, a Highland lake, thirty miles distant. The great work by which this is accomplished was begun in 1856, under the superintendence of Mr. Bateman, C.E. and completed three years afterwards. It was a formidable undertaking. The engineering difficulties were very considerable. The aqueduct from the lake to a service reservoir, constructed eight miles out of town, is twenty-six miles long. For the half of that distance the water is conveyed through tunnels. Four miles consist of iron piping carried across valleys, while for the rest there are open cuttings and bridges. The cost of the aqueduct averaged £18,000 per mile. The total cost of the work rather exceeds one million and a half. But this immense outlay has been well bestowed. It has placed Glasgow, in relation to her water supply, alike as regards quantity, quality, and price, far a-head of all the large towns in the kingdom. About twenty-five millions of gallons are brought into town daily, or at the rate of forty gallons per head of the population—an amount well nigh double that which could be obtained thirty years ago, and one that might be doubled again did necessity arise. Its purity has been attested, by frequent chemical analysis, to be very remarkable.

COMMERCE, TRADE, AND MANUFACTURES.

Fishing was the earliest branch of productive industry established in Glasgow. Cured salmon was exported in large quantities to France, and different French productions were taken in exchange. In 1667 a whale fishing company was formed, and a soap manufactory established. The commercial prosperity of this city may be dated from its embarkation in the Virginian tobacco trade.

The commerce of Glasgow was at first carried on in vessels chartered from English ports; although it is on record that this city was in possession of shipping prior to the year 1546, and in the reign of Charles II. the 'Leon' privateer was equipped here for a cruise against the Dutch. It was not until the year 1718, however, that a ship built on the Clyde, the property of Glasgow citizens, crossed the Atlantic. At that time a good supply of tobacco was brought to this market, and the merchants were enabled to dispose of that article upon more advantageous terms than those of London and other commercial towns in England, which produced great animosity between those parties. The English tobacco merchants charged those of Glasgow with frauds on the revenue. An inquiry was eventually brought before parliament, when a number of restrictions were imposed on the trade, which caused it to decline in Glasgow till the year 1735; it then began to revive, and at length attained such a degree of prosperity that, for several years previous to the American revolutionary war, the annual imports of tobacco into the Clyde were from 35,000, to 45,000 hogsheads; in the year immediately preceding that disastrous war, 57,143 hogsheads were imported; from 1,200 to 1,300 hogsheads, only, of the annual imports, were sold for home consumption—indeed this trade, at that period, engrossed nearly the whole capital and commercial enterprise of Glasgow.

The manufacture of green glass bottles was introduced in 1730, but the demand was then so very limited, that, although the establishment was of but inferior magnitude, the workmen were employed in the glass-house only about four months in the year. The flint glass or crystal manufacture was established in the year 1777; it has been brought to a state of great perfection, and is successfully carried on in the vicinity of the city. Inkle wares were first manufactured here in the year 1732, and were not then made in any other town in Britain. A Mr. Alexander Harvey, of this city, brought away from Haarlem, at the peril of his life, two inkle looms and a workman, and in consequence, the article was first manufactured in Glasgow. About the same date a manufactory of delph-ware was established here. The first print-field that appeared in this vicinity was at Pollokshaws, about the year 1742.

The merchants and manufacturers of Glasgow, compelled to turn their attention to other objects when their favourite intercourse with America was interrupted by the war in 1775, began more generally to speculate upon the establishment of manufactures; the introduction of the muslin trade was the result, and it was prosecuted by men of capital with the greatest spirit and success. Early in the present century, the high price paid for the embroidery of muslins enabled thousands of young women in Ayrshire to earn a comfortable living by what is still termed "Ayrshire needle work." Later, this industry was extended to the north of Ireland, and Belfast competitors became rivals for their employment. Still Glasgow remains the chief seat and mart of the manufacture. It was computed that in 1857 the sales of this production had a value of a million and a half. In that year one of the largest firms in the trade failed for a larger sum than had been ever before involved in any trade bankruptcy in Glasgow. The trade thus received a check, from which it has not yet wholly recovered. But its progress has been upwards, in the direction of a renewed prosperity. At present, the value of the annual sales is from seven to eight hundred thousand pounds a year.

From the introduction of power-loom weaving, in 1773, or more correctly, from the application of steam power to cotton spinning, in 1792, the cotton trade and manufactures in Glasgow largely helped to increase its wealth, and advance it to greatness. Almost all varieties of textile manufacture are here carried on, more or less. Many of the mills, however, are situated outside the city, and it is well nigh impossible to procure correct information as to the number of "hands" who are employed. The subjoined figures are picked from the last census, following the order therein observed:—"Persons engaged in art and mechanic production in which matters of various kinds are employed in combination, 26,870; persons working and dealing in textile fabrics and in dress, 70,187; persons working and dealing in animal substances, 1,082; persons working and dealing in vegetable substances, 4,824; persons working and dealing in minerals, 22,062."

The iron trade has grown to be one of the staple trades of Glasgow. The city has, in relation to it, very great advantages from its close proximity to the iron fields of the north. In its immediate vicinity there were last year 136 iron furnaces in blast, producing upwards of three thousand tons of pig iron daily. The Glasgow Exchange is the scene of sale for this vast manufacture, and the Clyde ports are those of shipment. We give the amount of production and of shipment for the last ten years:—

1855	820,000	542,000
1856	820,000	500,000
1857	900,000	532,000
1858	950,000	560,000
1859	980,000	575,000
1860	1,000,000	576,000
1861	1,040,000	590,000
1862	1,080,000	565,000
1863	1,150,000	620,000
1864	1,160,000	676,000
1865	1,161,000	740,500

In ship building, Glasgow deservedly holds a high position. Its building yards are both numerous and extensive, and the vessels constructed here, whether of timber or iron, have attained to a wide-spread celebrity. Specimens of them navigate every sea. During the year 1857, there were turned out in all 257 vessels, of every size and character, with a gross tonnage of 153,932. In the previous year the number of vessels were less, but the amount of tonnage was larger—a fact due to exceptional causes connected with the American war.

The merchants import, to a large amount, sugars, rum, wines, brandy, timber, coffee, cotton, flour, &c., and numberless other productions of the western world, particularly from Demerara, the Caraccas, Buenos Ayres, the United States, Canada, Nova Scotia, &c. Their commercial transactions likewise extend to the coasts of Asia and Africa, and are of considerable consequence in many of the ports of Europe. Their exportations comprise muslins, shawls, and every description of cotton goods, silks, glass, soap, whisky, and various manufactures of the neighbouring town of Paisley, as well as the products of the adjacent districts.

Of course, the Clyde is the great highway for mercantile traffic. The subjoined table shews the number and the scale of tonnage of the vessels arriving in the harbour:—

Vessels' tonnage.	Number of Sailing and Stm. vessels.	Vessels' tonnage	Number of Sailing and Stm. vessels.

Of these 16,355 vessels, 611 were from foreign ports, while 15,744 were engaged in the coasting trade. The gross tonnage of the whole was 1,719,038. The figures for the four preceding years were:—

1861	16,085	1,504,220
1862	15,864	1,530,642
1863	15,175	1,627,779

Rates on Vessels, on each time of Entering, or Using, or Departing from the River or Harbour.

1.—On all vessels, except as after-mentioned, arriving at or departing from the Harbour, from or to any place in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, per Register Ton ..... 1½d.
2.—On all Steam Vessels arriving at or departing from the Harbour, from or to any place within a line drawn from East to West across the Channel at Pladda, per Register Ton ..... ¾d.
3.—On all vessels arriving at or departing from the Harbour, from or to any place out of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, per Register Ton.... 4d.
4.—On all Vessels that shall remain in the Harbour over and above the first Twenty-four lawful Days, per Register Ton per Week ..... 1d.
5.—On all Vessels entering or departing from any of the Wet Docks or Tidal Basins, when constructed, in addition to the Harbour rates, per Register Ton.... 6d.
6.—On all Vessels that shall remain in any of the Wet Docks or Basins over and above the first Twenty-four lawful Days, per Register Ton per Week ..... 2d.
7.—On all Vessels entering or using the River, not liable for the above rates, and not trading with cargo liable for rates under Schedule H, per Register Ton ..... 6d. [Provided that the last-mentioned charge shall not extend to any Vessels the goods in which are exempted from rates by this Act.]
8.—On all Vessels entering or using the Trustees' Basin at Bowling, having previously been regularly trading on the River, per Register Ton per Week ..... ½d.
9.—On all other Vessels entering or using the said Basin, per Register Ton per Week ..... 2d.

Vessels proceeding empty for a cargo, or returning empty having discharged a cargo to or from any place beyond the limits of the Harbour, shall not be liable to pay any rates for the empty trip.

Vessels passing to or from any place on the River Clyde above Huchesontown Bridge, through that portion of the River which is embraced within the limits of the Harbour, shall not be liable for any of the rates specified in this Schedule, unless they shall use any of the said Docks or Tidal Basins, or any of the Quays or other works constructed by the Trustees on the banks of the River, within the limits of the Harbour, or unless they shall take in or discharge their cargo, or any part thereof, within the said limits, or shall remain therein longer than may be necessary for passing through the same.

Grangemouth is the port at the eastern entrance of the Forth and Clyde canal, through which sea-going vessels of considerable burthen can pass to Glasgow or to the Frith of Clyde, and places beyond. The length of the canal to Glasgow is 29 miles, and to the Clyde 35 miles. The locks are 20 feet wide and 74 feet long, admitting vessels about 68½ feet in length, and little under 20 feet in breadth. The depth of water is fully 9 feet. The toll for passing on the canal is one penny per ton per mile for all articles except gunpowder. For the accommodation of vessels too large to enter the canal, capacious wet docks and other works have been recently provided, and there is now room for about 20,000 tons of shipping. The depth of water in the river Carron, between the port and the Frith of Forth, is about 20 feet at spring, and 15 feet at neap tides.

The chief railways which come to Glasgow are the Caledonian, the North British, and the Glasgow and South-Western. Their termini are far apart; but a project is now on foot for joining them and bringing the various parts of the city into communication with each other by means of the Union Railway. An act, authorising the carrying out of this project, was obtained two years ago; and it is now being pushed forward with all celerity. It may likewise be mentioned here that regular and frequent communication by steam packet is maintained with Liverpool, Cork, Dublin, Belfast, Derry, and the Western Highlands.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT, &c.

The 'Lord Provost' is the designation of the chief magistrate of Glasgow, who is styled honourable; the subordinate functionaries are eight bailies, the dean of guild, and the deacon convener. There are forty councillors—three for each of the sixteen wards into which the city is divided, and the dean of guild and deacon convener, who are councillors by virtue of their offices. The principal officers connected with the corporation are the treasurer, chamberlain, town-clerks, master of works, bailie of the river and Frith of Clyde and his depute, baillie of Provan, procurator fiscal, and superintendent of streets and buildings. There are also two other bodies that exercise municipal privileges—the Merchants' House and the Trades' House. The dean of guild belongs to and is nominated by the former, and the convener to the latter house, by which he is appointed. As illustrative of the onerous and varied duties that divolve upon the municipal authorities it may be stated that the corporation administer solely, or in part, twenty distinct trusts, that the united annual revenues of these is in excess of £400,000, and that the debts affecting them amount to more than three millions. Besides, they have either complete or partial control of the financial affairs connected with numerous charitable foundations, schools, &c.

The police are under the direction of the honourable the lord provost, the magistrates, dean of guild, deacon convener, and eighteen commissioners chosen by the Town council from among its own members. There are five police districts—a central district, and one for each quarter of the city. There are several courts held within the jurisdiction of the city, the chief of which are the following:—the Dean of Guild Court, held every alternate Thursday, at eleven o'clock, takes cognisance of buildings and streets. The Sheriff Small Debt Court, for debts not exceeding £12, sits every Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The Justice of Peace Small Debt Court, for the Lower Ward of Lanarkshire, meets every Monday morning, at ten, in the County Hall, to decide claims of £8 and under. The County Court sits every Wednesday for criminal offences, and Thursday for the recovery of small debts. The River Baillie Court sits every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and has marine jurisdictions between Glasgow bridge and the Clough, near the mouth of the Clyde. The Sheriff Ordinary Court sits every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday, and the Burgh Ordinary Court every Friday, except during vacation; both adjudicate on causes of any amount, however large.

The principal gaol, called the North Prison, is in Duke-street, which, unfortunately, it has been found necessary to enlarge, by the erection of a considerable compartment in the rear; debtors are confined in the west wing of this prison. The South Prison is in the rear of a commanding range of buildings, with its frontage towards the river, near the Victoria bridge; there is a noble portico in the centre, composed of a double row of fluted columns. The justiciary hall is in the centre, arranged with the requisite conveniences for a court of justice.

Glasgow returns two members to Parliament; the gentlemen now sitting are William Graham, Esq., and Robert Dalglish, Esq.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.

The Cathedral or High Church, ornaments the north eastern termination of the city, and is one of the very few ecclesiastical structures of ancient Scotland that has withstood the withering influence of time, the assaults of religious fury, and the sapping of neglect; it arose in the early part of the twelfth century, John Achaius, Bishop of Glasgow, was its founder, and John Murdo its supposed architect, the reigning king being David I. who witnessed its consecration. A stone above the door of the choir tells us, in Latin, that it was dedicated in 1197. St. Mungo or Kentigern being invoked as its tutelar patron. The figure of the edifice is cruciform. From the centre of the building rises a square embattled tower, of lofty octangular form, from which springs a spire. The length of the choir from east to west is 320 feet, and the breadth is 63. The height of the nave is 85 feet, and of the choir 90. The spire is 325 feet in height, and the circumference of the whole building 1,100 feet. One hundred and forty-seven pillars support the pile, and its windows number one hundred and fifty-seven. They vary in size, and some of them are of exquisite design. The building has lately undergone a process of restoration and embellishment, which, bringing out all the beauty of the original plan, makes it, in some respects, one of the most richly-decorated temples in Europe The windows have been filled with stained glass according to a connected and harmonious plan. Those in the nave illustrate Old Testament subjects, according to the order of biblical chronology. Those in the choir represent subjects taken from the teaching of the Saviour. The work was chiefly executed in Munich. The cost of the east window, the finest of the series, was defrayed by parliamentary grant; hat of the others by donors who presented, or joined in presenting, separate windows, by way of family memorial. The Barony Church, contiguous to the cathedral, was built in 1798, from a design by Mr. Adam; the parish connected with this church, is the largest in the city. The College or Blackfriars Church, in High-street, is a plain building, erected in 1699, on the site of a more ancient pile, called Blackfriars, which, in 1666, was destroyed by a thunder-storm. The Tron or Laigh Church, near the Cross, was erected in 1794, and is a plain building, surmounted by a cupola. A spire, built in 1637, stands between it and the street, having a clock and two bells. The name of 'Tron' was applied to this church from a part of its steeple having been used as a weigh-house. The clock faces of this church are lighted externally by gas lamps. Saint Andrew's Church, which stands in a square of the same name, was completed in 1756, at an expense of £15,000, and resembles that of Saint Martin's-in-the-Fields, London. The architect was Mungo Nasmith. Saint Enoch's Church, was erected in 1780 from designs by Mr. Jaffray: the front, on which is the spire, is decorated with a Doric portico, and has a light and handsome appearance; it stands in St. Enoch's-square, and is a graceful terminating object from Buchanan-street. Saint George's Church, on the west-side of Buchanan-street, fronting George-street, is a handsome edifice, with three-quarter Doric columns in front, the whole height of the church. The steeple is crowned with a dome and obelisk, and is one hundred and sixty-two feet high. This church was finished at an expense of £9,000. Saint John's Church, in Græme-street, is one of the largest places of worship in the city, affording sixteen hundred sittings: it was built during the residence here of Dr. Chalmers, whose pulpit oratory attracted large congregations. The exterior is of chaste Gothic. This church has a magnificent steeple, one hundred and thirty-eight feet high, containing a complete peal of bells. The Gorbals Church is situated at the east-end of Carlton-place, fronting the river: it was completed in 1810, from designs by Mr. D. Hamilton. The clock of this church, from its great elevation, is seen to a great distance. Saint David's Church, at the end of Candlerigg-street, is in the Gothic style, and was built from the designs of Messrs. Rickman and Hutchinson, of Birmingham. Circumstances have rendered it expedient to retain the shape and dimensions of the old church; it is built in the form of a cross, and is ornamented with a tower one hundred and twenty feet high, containing a complete set of bells. The vaulted cemetery beneath is one of the most complete in the kingdom. The cost of the church was £7,000, but the sepulchres in the crypt sold for £4,000. The patronage of the city churches belongs to the magistrates and town-council, with the exception of those of the inner High church and the barony, which pertain to the Crown. The patronage of Gorbals church is with the heritors or feuars, who purchased it from the college. The stipends of the city clergy are £425 per annum, those of the inner High church and the barony are considerably more. The pew sittings are let annually. Apart from the city churches, the revenues of which are drawn by the corporation, who pay the salaries of the clergy, there are many churches in the city connected with the Establishment which are self-supporting. Altogether there are one hundred and seventy-three places of worship, affording accommodation to upwards of 150,000 persons, or considerably more than a third of the population. Thirty-eight of them are connected with the Established church, forty-five with the Free church, and forty with the United Presbyterian church, while there are six Episcopalian and ten Roman Catholic. Many of them are fine buildings; such as Park and Sandyford Established churches—the St. John's, St. Matthews, St. George's, the College, and Kelvinside Free churches—St. Vincent Street, Claremont, and Lansdowne United Presbyterian churches—and Bath-street and Trinity Congregationalist churches.

CEMETERIES—Close to the cathedral is the Necropolis, one of the finest cemeteries in Britain. The approach to it is by a lofty bridge, which spans the valley through which the Molendinar runs. This bridge has rather appropriately been called the 'Bridge of Sighs.' The grounds, which are beautified with shrubberies, trees, flowers, and gravel walks, are also thickly adorned with monumental columns and statues tastefully executed and beautiful in design. Sighthill Cemetery, in the vicinage of St. Rollox, is of considerable extent, and is entered by a magnificent gateway, near to which is a handsome chapel. Hardie and Baird—political martyrs—have an obelisk erected here to their memory. The southern Necropolis, Rutherglen, is also neat in its arrangement of walks and flowers, and it has also many monumental adornments.

INSTITUTIONS FOR EDUCATION, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS.

The UNIVERSITY.—This venerable College presents its antiquated front on the eastern side of High-street. Entering by the centre gate, over which are the royal arms, the visitor finds himself in the first quadrangle, and he will not fail to notice the antique stone stairs leading to the Faculty Hall, with their guardian lions, sejant on one side, and unicorn on the other: this hall contains many rare paintings, both historical and portrait; among the latter are those of Luther, Knox, Buchanan, Napier, and Smollet. The second quadrangle is much larger, surrounded on three sides by buildings, part of which are in the old monastic style, with low towers and curtains; while others, of recent erection, are built in the modern style, the effect of which is distressing to good taste. These buildings contain the anatomical theatre, and rooms for the classes in Greek, logic, humanity, chemistry, medicine, and mathematics. The old library is an insulated building to the south-east; and the new one is at the south end of the anatomical theatre. The chapel, or common hall, is fitted up with considerable taste, and can accommodate nearly 1,000 worshippers. Rising over the entrance to the second quadrangle is the steeple, 135 feet high, which is protected from lightning by a conductor, erected in 1772 under the direction of the renowned Dr. Franklin. At the back of the College are spacious gardens, in which is placed the Macfarlane Observatory; and near the entrance to these gardens, forming the eastern termination to the College, stands the Hunterian Museum, an edifice pronounced by critics to be one of the most felicitous specimens of classical architecture in Great Britain. It was reared in 1804 from designs by Mr. Stark, the principal front forming a Roman Doric portico of six columns, behind which is a recess, separated by a second row of pillars. Beautiful as this portico is, the whole fabric is in harmony with it, combining graceful proportion of parts with simple elegance of form. This museum was bequeathed to the college by the celebrated Dr. Hunter, of London, who was a native of East Kilbride. The collection comprises specimens of natural history, anatomical preparations, paintings, books, and medals; the medals being estimated at £30,000, and the whole collection cost Dr. Hunter £100,000. The pictures are all from great masters; amongst many others are Titian, Guido, Domenichino, Rubens, and Rembrandt. The university was founded by Turnbull, Roman Catholic Bishop of Glasgow, in 1450-1. At the Reformation, Archbishop James Beaton fled before the triumphant Presbyterians, carrying with him the charters and records, which he placed in the Scots' College at Paris. James VI. granted a new charter, and endowed the College with valuable property, since which it has risen to high reputation.

The history of the University is full of interest. Its foundation was a bull issued by Pope Nicholas V. on the 7th of January, 1450-1. It is, therefore, the second oldest among the Universities of Scotland, St. Andrew's alone being before it. It was established under the name then given to such institutions—studium generale, and included all the usual faculties in addition to theology, canon, and civil law, and the arts. At first the business of instruction was carried on in a building near the Cathedral, in a street now called the Rotten Row. In 1460 the first Lord Hamilton made a gift to the incorporation of a site, comprising a portion of that which the present buildings occupy. Thither the teaching and residence of the members of the University were transfered in 1465. Its business was carried on with varied success till the time of the Reformation, when its revenues were thrown into utter confusion. The public spirit of the citizens was the means of providing for its restoration; and in 1574 renewed animation was given to its academic teaching by the advent, as principal, of the famous Andrew Melville. His nephew reports that, 'there was na place in Europe comparable to Glasgow for guid letters during these yeirs, for a plentifull and chepe mercat of all kinds of languages, artes, and sciences.' The prosperity thus acquired was largely confirmed by the concession in 1577 of a charter granted by the Regent Merton, and usually known as the 'Nova Erectio' of James VI., then in minority. This instrument was the foundation of many of the statutes by which the University is still governed. During the Protectorate its welfare was enhanced by the attendance of many nonconforming students from England; but at the Restoration, in 1660, it was deprived of a great portion of its resources, and three of its professorships fell into abeyance. Its fortunes rose again with the Revolution. The chair of mathematics was revived in 1691, and during the next thirty years another half-dozen chairs were either revived or established, viz., Humanity, 1706; Oriental Languages, 1709; Civil Law and Medicine, 1713; Church History, 1716; and Anatomy, 1718. A professorship of Astronomy was established in 1760; while during the present century a dozen new chairs have been founded—Natural History, 1807; Surgery and Midwifery, 1815; Chemistry, 1817; Botany, 1818; Materia Medica, 1831; Institutes of Medicine and Forensic Medicine, 1839; Civil Engineering, 1840; Conveyancing, English Language and Literature, and Biblical Criticism, 1861. Previous to the Universities Act of 1858, the business of the University was transacted in three distinct Courts, viz.:—the Senate, comprising the Rector, Dean, and all the Professors; the Faculty, containing the Principal and the Professors whose Chairs had been instituted in, or previous to, the last century; and the Comitia, comprehending the Rector, the Dean, the Principal, the Professors, and the Matriculated Students of the University. But, by the Universities Act of 1858, important changes were made in the constitution and government of the University, by which the distinction between the Faculty and the Senate was abolished, and two new bodies, the University Court and the University Council, were instituted. The Council consists of the enrolled graduates of the University, and has only deliberative functions. The Court, consisting of seven members, viz., the Rector, the Principal, the Dean of Faculties, and four Assessors, nominated severally by the Chancellor, the Rector, the General Council of the University, and the Senatus Academicus, is empowered to review all decisions of the Senatus Academicus, to effect improvements in the internal arrangements, and to exercise other powers in the government of the University. The Senatus, consisting of the Principal and twenty-five Professors, is entrusted with the ordinary superintendence and regulation of the teaching and discipline of the University, and the administration of its properties and revenues.

The changes in the city connected with the vast extension of its commerce and manufactures, and the transference westwards of the principal part of its inhabited portion, have rendered the district in which the buildings are situated ineligible for an academic institution, while the buildings themselves, from their limited extent and defective construction, have become unsuited to modern requirements. It has therefore been determined to remove them to an elevated and salubrious site beyond the West-end Park. Ground has been obtained at a cost of £98,000; plans of a handsome and commodious erection have been designed by Mr. George Gilbert Scott; the present buildings have been sold to the Union Railway Company for £100,000, and munificent subscriptions—exceeding in amount any modern precedent—have been made towards helping forward the scheme of removal, which is now being actively prosecuted. Students of theology connected with the Free Church attend their own college—a handsome building in Lynedoch-place, with a lofty campanile tower, whence a fine view of the city and surrounding district can be obtained. In addition to the prelections of four professors, who carry them through a strictly theological course, lectures are likewise delivered on natural science in its theological bearings. The Andersonian University, in George-street, founded by the late John Anderson, professor of natural philosophy in the University of Glasgow, on the 7th of May, 1795, and the following year was incorporated by the magistrates and council. This University is placed under the superintendence of eighty-one trustees, and the lord provost is one of the inspecting visitors. The endowment consisted of a philosophical apparatus, a library, and museum; but the prosperity of the institution has been so great that the trustees have purchased the extensive pile of buildings formerly occupied by the grammar school, which were opened in 1828, and the numerous classes now receive a more extended education, including philosophy, science, and the arts. The museum is opened to the public from eleven to three, on the payment of sixpence. The High School, situate at the top of the hill behind the above University, is of an origin supposed to be coeval with the Cathedral, and within this Alma Mater several hundreds of youths acquire the elements of a liberal education. The Academy, in Elmbank-row, is in some measure a rival institution to the above; both are very flourishing. They resemble the gymnasia of Germany, and afford an education intermediate between the ordinary school curriculum and the higher branches of academic learning. There are two Normal schools, or training academies, one in connection with the Established, and the other with the Free Church. An immense number of children are here taught, and there are about a hundred pupil teachers in each. The Government School of Art, in Ingram-street, is attended by about two thousand pupils. The city has no free library like that of Liverpool or of Manchester, but the nucleus of such an institution is to be found in Stirling's Library, founded in 1791 by a merchant of the city, and enhanced by subsequent benefactions, till it now numbers upwards of 30,000 volumes, which may be consulted in a commodious and comfortable reading-room. The Mechanics' Institution, North Hanover-street, owes its origin to a dispute among the managers of the Andersonian University, and it would be well if all quarrels terminated so beneficially. The useful class of persons that give name to this institution acquire, from competent lecturers, that species of knowledge which, in the first instance, elevates themselves, and will ultimately the nation to which they belong. Cowcaddens Mechanics' Institution, in Stewart-street, contains nearly 3,000 volumes of carefully selected works. The Calton, Mile-end, and Bridgeton Mechanics' Institution was instituted in 1833, for an object similar to that of the above, namely, improvement in the arts and sciences. Faculty of Physicians' and Surgeons' Hall is an ornamental building, situated in St. Enoch's square, within which the two incorporated bodies above named hold their meetings. The charter of their incorporation confers the right of granting diplomas, after examination, to students in medicine and surgery; and every person practising without such diploma in Glasgow, Renfrew, Dumbarton, Lanark, Kyle, Carrick, Ayr, and Cunningham, is liable to a fine of £3. 8s. 6d. for each offence. The members of faculty enjoy the privilege of exemption from many imposts and irksome duties. The freedom fine of admission into the faculty is £150, and licentiates within the city or suburbs pay £20, but those in the country £5. 5s.; for the diploma of each student £5. 5s. is required. Every candidate for a diploma must produce evidence that he has studied three winter sessions, either at an university or under resident members of the college of physicians and surgeons of Edinburgh, London, or Dublin, or under the members of the faculty of physicians and surgeons in Glasgow; and that during that period he has attended public lectures on anatomy, surgery, chemistry, materia medica, the theory and practice of medicine, and midwifery; and that he has attended one year at some hospital, and studied pharmacy in an apothecary's or surgeon's shop for six months, without which he cannot be taken on trial. Candidates who have served an apprenticeship of three or more years must produce similar evidence. The faculty contribute to a fund, founded in 1792, for the support of their widows and children.—Faculty of Procurators' Hall, West George-street, near to St. George's Church, is a large building in the Venetian style, designed as a library and hall for the procurators. It forms one of the finest architectural embellishments of the city.—The educational institutions of Glasgow are very numerous, and are supported with creditable spirit; they are enumerated under the head of endowed schools, and in the list of public buildings, at the end. But the Ragged School, which occupies a noble building in Rotten-row, merits special notice from its peculiar character and beneficial results: the pupils are mostly the offspring of dishonest and profligate parents, and the children are fed as well as instructed.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The Royal Infirmary, situate near the Cathedral, exhibits an exterior of considerable beauty, while the arrangements of the interior are skilfully adapted to their benevolent object. The building has been much enlarged since its first erection, the latest addition being for the reception of fever patients. The lowest story contains a laboratory, an apothecary's shop, hot and cold baths, and strong chambers for the temporary restraint of the insane. Beneath the dome is a spacious circular apartment, which is appropriated to surgical operations. The Royal Lunatic Asylum, at Gartnavel, two miles west of the city, is a noble edifice, admirably constructed for the recovery and comfort of its unhappy inmates, no appliance is wanting that can minister to the attainment of these objects—a portion of the establishment is appropriated to pauper patients. The Town's Hospital, for paupers, in the Parliamentary-road is a building strikingly original in its design. The centre is octagonal, with four wings diverging from it. The wings contain rows of commodious chambers, and a long gallery for exercise. This scrucure was erected as an asylum for lunatics, but these have been removed to the Royal Lunatic Asylum, at Gartnavel. The Poor House for the extensive Barony parish at Barnhill, is a very capacious asylum for the children of poverty, and well adapted by its cleanliness, ventilation, and position, to mitigate the ills of their condition; The Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Prospect Bank, Queen's Park, possesses every adaptation for its interesting object object. The Asylum for the Blind in Castle street, by a recent enlargement, has been rendered an ornament to that quarter, and is capable of accommodating more than one hundred inmates, who are advantageously employed in the fabrication of various useful articles; and the recent invention of printing in relief, by enabling the blind to read manipular or tangible letters, has given a most interesting facility to their education. The Magdalen Asylum, adjoining the town's hospital, was erected in 1812, from designs by Dr. Cleland, a gentleman to whom Glasgow owes many obligations. The accommodations are in every way suitable to the purpose for which it was built; and its benefactors have the satisfaction of believing that many of its female inmates have subsequently become permanently worthy of the protection that has been afforded them. The Lock Hospital, in Rotten row was formed in 1805, for the cure of unfortunate females. Hutcheson's Hospital, in Ingram-street, was founded by the two brothers, George and Thomas Hutcheson, between the years 1639 and 1641: the former amassed a large fortune as a writer and notary, although his charges were so moderate, that, it is stated, he would never charge more than sixteen pennies Scots for the writing of a bond, however large the amount: the latter brother was a preacher. From the original endowment and subsequent benefactions, the trustees are enabled to appropriate £3,000 per annum to pensions for aged men and women, and for the education and partial clothing of poor boys, together with £3 per annum to the latter. The present building, erected in 1803, is ornamented with an octagonal spire, one hundred and fifty-six feet high. The Eye Infirmary, 76 Charlotte-street and 95 Greendyke-street, is liberally supported, and has been successful in its operations. The House of Refuge and the Night Asylum are large and well managed institutions. In addition to the benevolent institutions already enumerated, there exist many others, which shed a lustre on the memoies of departed citizens of Glasgow. Mitchel's Mortification, made in 1729, yields £100 per annum to decayed burgesses and their families; and Tennant's, made in 1741, renders to three widows 80 merks, or £4. 18s 10d., the remainder devolving on two of the General Session Charity Schools. Wilson's Charity, founded in 1778, bestows education and clothing on forty-eight poor boys; and Millars, since 1790, has educated sixty girls annually, at a yearly expense of £300. Natives of every county in Scotland have found a home in Glasgow; and there is scarcely one that does not give its name to a Society composed of such persons, united together for the two-fold objects of cherishing home memories, and aiding persons from the same district who may have fallen into distress.

Although not eleemosynary in their character, this seems the place to advert to the cheap dining halls which have been established here, and have supplied a model for other towns throughout the kingdom. The distinguishing characteristic of the scheme principally was that every article sold,—a cup of tea or coffee, a basin of broth, or whatever it was,—should be charged a penny. There are now a central depot where the cooking is done, and twenty-six branch establishments where the viands are retailed. In any one of these, a good, wholesome, and abundant dinner—a dinner of three courses and dessert—can be had for fourpence halfpenny. The total amount drawn last year, was £40,234 13s. 10½d.,—a sum which represents ten millions of penny rations. The profit of these was enough to pay 5 per cent. of interest on the capital sunk in plant, and to leave a balance of £886 19s. 11d., which was divided among the city charities.

RELIGIOUS AND MORAL SOCIETIES.

Missionary effort in Glasgow comands, as it deserves, an extensive and encouraging sympathy, and in connection with the Religious Tract and Book Society, which we gladly give a brief notice of, will, it is trusted, continue to prosper. The object of the Religious Tract and Book Society, is to promote the diffusion of a healthy religious literature, especially among the humbler classes of the people, by the gratuitous distribution of tracts, and the offering by the system of colporteurage, of periodicals of a sound religious character for sale, at the houses of those who might not be attracted to them at the ordinary book shops. Other societies for religious objects are also very numerous, and are liberally supported. The 'Glasgow Association for Establishing Lodging Houses for the Working Classes' is an interesting 'sign of the times' we live in; the association have purchased several plots of ground in airy localities, whereon to erect dwelling places, that shall be spacious, cleanly, and well ventilated, and these will be let at very low charges.—There are also several Bible Societies and Sabbath School Societies, besides the Young Men's Christian Association, a numerous body, organized after the Society in London bearing the same name, and in connection with which a course of lectures is delivered every winter by eminent men. The Abstainer's Union is a body which also deserves mention. Organized with the view of abating the vice of drunkenness, the directors seek to wean men from the tavern and the tap room by holding out to them other amusements. In winter they have concerts every Saturday evening in the City Hall, which is invariably thronged, while in summer a system of country excursions is wrought out,—they are also largely patronized.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT.

The Theatre Royal is in Dunlop-street, and is, so far as architectural features are concerned, somewhat out of order. The interior is however sumptuously fitted up, and is really strikingly effective. It was burned down some years since, nothing but the front being left; and it is now about to be removed consequent upon the operations attending the construction of the Union Railway. A new site has not (1866) yet been determined upon. The Prince's Theatre has two entrances, West Nile street and Buchanan-street; this building is also fitted up with taste. The Assembly and Concert Rooms were erected in 1796, and constitute a very elegant embellishment to Ingram-street: the wings were added in 1807. The entire building has been alienated from its original purpose, and is now occupied by the Athenæum Library and Reading room. The Royal Botanic Garden, Great Western road, is highly deserving of inspection. The hot-houses are extensive and well supplied with specimens of the floral and other vegetable productions of every tropical clime, including the far-famed Victoria Regia, or water lily. Within this enclosure flourish more than 12,000 species of varieties of trees and shrubs, inclusive of coffee, cotton, tea, sugar, chocolate, cocoa, date, cinnamon, nutmeg, clove and bread fruit. Strangers are admitted on payment of sixpence, and the working classes free five days during the Fair week every year. There are several Music Saloons that are very attractive, conducted upon the plan of affording refreshments, enlivened by gratuitous amusements.

Markets and Fairs.—The chief market day for corn and provisions is Wednesday. There are five fairs in the year, viz., the second Wednesday in January, Thursday before Easter, last Monday in May, the whole of the second week in July, and the first Wednesday after Martinmas.

The public slaughter-houses are in Market-street, Scott street, Milton-street, and Moore-street, Gallowgate.

NEIGHBOURING VILLAGES.

Govan is a picturesque village nearly 3 miles W. from Glasgow, on the south bank of the Clyde. It possesses a handsome church, belonging to the Establishment, surmounted by a spire, in imitation of Stratford-upon-Avon. A Free, and an United Presbyterian church, and several schools are in the village, and there are several ship-building yards. Though outside the municipal boundaries of the city, the village is now almost one with it, there being a continuous line of houses connecting the two. The same may likewise be said of Partick, a village on the north bank of the river, opposite Govan. It is irregularly built but environed by agreeable scenery. There are several mills and factories and boat building yards in the place. The village contains three Established, two Free, and three United Presbyterian churches, and several schools. Its population is increasing with extraordinary rapidity; in 1851 it was 6,670, in 1861 it was 14,861.

Maryhill a village 3 miles N. W. from Glasgow, is situated on the banks of the river Kelvin, which stream is crossed by the Forth and Clyde canal, by the medium of a noble aqueduct of lofty altitude; the village contains Established and Free churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are print works, iron foundries bleach-works, and glass-works.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.

Post Office Savings Banks are open daily for the receipt and payment of money, during the hours appointed for Money Order business.

Interest at the rate of £2 10s. per cent. is given on the money deposited in them.

Depositors in them have direct Government security for the prompt repayment of their money.

A Depositor in any one of the Post Office Banks can continue his deposits at any other of such Banks, without notice or change of book; and can withdraw his money at that Post Office Bank which is most convenient to him.

Any additional information required, with respect to Post Office Savings Banks, can be obtained at any Post Office, or by application to the Controller, Savings Bank Department, General Post Office, London, E.C.
